The main title is "SINGAPORE" and the sub-section is "THE STRAITS TIMES". The navigation bar below the header includes links for SINGAPORE, POLITICS, ASIA, WORLD, MULTIMEDIA, LIFESTYLE, FORUM, OPINION, BUSINESS, SPORT, TECH, and a search icon. The article headline is "JC syllabus revamp: Humanities". The text of the article discusses the changes to the junior college syllabus, emphasizing inquiry skills and new themes like tropical environment, globalisation, and sustainable development. The author is listed as Amelia Teng.

Emphasis on understanding the how and why of things

The junior college syllabus has undergone its first revamp in a decade, affecting 9,900 or so students going into JC this year. The changes aim to help them apply what they learn in class to the real world and be exposed to more current content. They will also be tested on skills such as drawing connections between different topics.

Amelia Teng

Inquiry skills are the new buzzwords for the study of the humanities at the junior college level.

Instead of just learning content, there is a bigger emphasis on getting students to probe and understand the hows and whys.

Geography will be taught over three main themes: tropical environment, globalisation and sustainable development. Before, it was divided into physical and human geography, each taught on its own,
